The building was created by combining a new building and a reconstructed Baroque Schönkirch Palace from 1734. During the reconstruction of the palace, valuable historical elements and paintings were preserved. Method of restoration The main architect of the DRN, Stanislav Fiala, and the main restorer, Martin Pavala, named the term "restoration brutalism". The dominant feature of the courtyard is a designed impressive tree made of baked stainless steel. The secondary façade, visually connecting Schönkirch Palace and DRN, is made of the same material.

Excellent transport accessibility by public transport, a few minutes walk from the metro station Národní třída and two tram stops. Wenceslas Square and the Old Town are less than an 8-minute drive away, and the banks of the Vltava River are only a few steps away.
